

I recently learned about Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election. I am shocked at this clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

We do not need large corporations like Sinclair coming into our communities and dictating to us what we should and shouldn't care about. What we DO need is a fair and balanced look at the issues that affect us, and commentary from local people in our communities.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
